The Daily Quote

"House GOP leaders are looking at a short extension of highway programs to buy their caucus time to agree on a longer-term alternative to the Senate's two-year, $109 billion transportation bill...With senators showing no interest in a ninth extension of the 2005 surface transportation law...House Speaker John A. Boehner will face pressure to follow through on his threat to take up the Senate bill (S. 1813)...Boehner, an Ohio Republican, before last week's House recess said that he would hold a vote on the Senate bill or something close to it unless his caucus could coalesce around a version of the House's five-year, $260 billion transportation bill (H.R. 7). House Democrats are almost universally opposed to that bill, and the GOP caucus is sharply divided."
